Officials Welcome Japan's Envoys

NOTHER glad spot came into the lives of Washington officials when on Wednesday Viscount Ishii, special Ambassador from Japan, and his suite arrived. A dinner at the White House Thursday night and three dinner parties, that of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy on Friday night, with pleasant little luncheon parties and a glorious prospective for this week, all combined to lift the leaden gloom of

Then there was a small army of cupids-rampant laying in ambush for men in khaki and girls in sweeping tulle veils-and such interesting weddings, too. Of course, there is on first thought something quite incongruous in the mingling of khaki uniforms and leather leggins, and even spurs, with satin trains four yards long and filmy tulle veils and draperies; but these are war days, and the girl who must stand at the altar with a civilian is indeed a sorry sight. The mother of a last week's bride said that of course her daughter would wear a conventional bridal costume, as unsuited as it seemed on first thought, for elsewise what would she have to show her own daughters in the next generation.

France, Great Britain, Russia, Italy, and Belgium, have sent their missions and Norway and Sweden their special emissaries, while the Swiss, and the Netherlands are waiting at the door, all bent upon some plan to draw upon the resources, financial and otherwise of the United States. Even the no-table Danish mission which was here for a time came to claim a fee.

They carried bouquets of pink roses.

Mr. Lieut. Allen Garner, U. S. R. C., a cousin of the bridesroom, served him as best man.

Following the ceremony, the bride's parents stood with them in receiving the congratulations of the hundred and more guests, Mrs. Fitts wearing a handsome gown of white silk and orchid brocade. The gown was fashioned with a slight drapery at the sides, and a straight drapery of orchid Georgette crepe fell straight from the waist almost to the hem of the skirt, where it was finished by a fringe of orchid and crystal beads. The bodice was draped in orchid Georgette, and trimmed with ornaments of crystal and orchid bromaments of crystal and orchid colored beads, while the elbow sleeves were embroidered in beads.
